

This course is accredited by the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors (RICS), the most prestigious international organisation representing property professionals. Created in 1868 and with over 140 000 members in over 140 countries, RICS represents professionals working in property, land and the built environment all around the world. RICS sets standards and regulates the profession, based on a strict code of ethics; the organisation is also the leading source of property-related knowledge and provides independent, impartial advice to members, governments, and global organisations.

RICS only works with top education providers recognised for their academic excellence. The RICS accreditation means you have the opportunity to become a member, which opens you the doors to a large number of benefits:

- preferred choice of employers
- globally recognised designation (MRICS and FRICS)
- elite professional standing
- significantly increased career opportunities and earning potential
- networking opportunities through an international professional community
- strict code of ethics – a guarantee for clients and prospects
- credibility and influence with decision makers at national and international level
- life-long learning opportunities
- guidance, information and support from the National Association in your country

In continental Europe, the RICS has accredited undergraduate and postgraduate courses in more than ten countries. If YOU are a student of one of these courses, this could be your first step towards an international career in the world of property. To find out how you can join the RICS via the Graduate routes, visit www.joinricsineurope.eu.